

without increasing your costs

It's possible to increase the positive environmental and social impact of any gathering in tangible ways without necessarily increasing costs. This is how:

Find a city and venue with good transport links that is centrally located. Concentrate activities in one place to avoid unnecessary and costly transportation. Select certified energy- and water-efficient facilities, and use a venue that actively supports human rights and fair labour practices.

CWT Meetings & Events Says Sustainability Is Key for Events in 2020

Minneapolis, 15 October 2019: CWT Meetings & Events, the global meetings and events division of CWT, says that sustainability will continue to be an ever more important business consideration for the $840 billion industry in 2020, according to the M&E 2020 Future Trends Report bonus feature, The Future of Sustainable Events, published today.

As activists protest in some of the world's best-known destinations – including London, Sydney, Amsterdam, Madrid, New York and Washington, DC – demanding action on climate change, companies are increasingly taking notice.

“The sustainability of the meetings and events industry, in fact of the entire travel industry, is at the forefront of companies’ and planners’ minds in 2020,” said Derek Sharp, Senior Vice President and Managing Director, CWT Meetings & Events. “It’s driven by news coverage of climate change but, more importantly, it’s supported by the next generation of travelers – the millennials who are poised to become the biggest group of business travelers globally from 2024 onwards, and the centennials who are right behind them.

“These are people for whom travel has become commonplace and accessible in a way that it wasn’t for older generations,” Sharp added. “They want to continue meeting in popular destinations, but they are also hyper aware of the need to adopt sustainable practices that respect the environment and local communities wherever they go.”

Deloitte’s Global Millennial Survey 2019 has found that climate change is the greatest concern for this generation.

In response, companies and meeting planners are adopting various initiatives, including offsetting air miles with carbon, eliminating plastic waste, opting for locally-sourced and produced food and drinks, or choosing ethical suppliers.

As consumers and employees around the world seek out companies and brands that reflect their values, major international initiatives such as the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals are helping to drive home the message that, in 2020 and beyond, sustainability and responsible business are no longer just a feel-good item on HR’s agenda, but have real consequences for a company’s brand and bottom line.
